John Stanis is involved in a broad range of litigation, employment and commercial law matters. Conversant in Japanese, John represents U.S. subsidiaries of Japanese companies. John's clients appreciate his judgment and practical approach to handling their most important business decisions and challenges in the U.S. market. John understands the differences between the Japanese and American approach to business, and is able to explain even the most divergent perspectives while devising a solution that is workable for his client.

John's litigation experience includes appearing in state and federal courts throughout the country. He represents clients in pursuing and defending claims involving commercial disputes, personal injury/asbestos claims, distributor terminations, logistics disputes, wrongful employee termination, wage and hour claims, discrimination, harassment, misappropriation of trade secrets and corporate opportunities, non-competition and confidentiality agreements, title insurance, landlord/tenant and construction disputes, and creditors' rights in bankruptcy.

John has extensive experience in counseling and training clients regarding compliance with state, federal and local anti-discrimination and anti-harassment laws. He regularly works with clients to prepare and implement employee handbooks, executive agreements, and best practices for protecting intellectual property, employee discipline and terminations. His focus remains on maximizing each client's work environment and preventing, managing and defending against any claims that might arise.

Moreover, John regularly assists clients in drafting and negotiating a wide variety of commercial, sales and product distribution agreements. These initiatives include secured
